THE GREATEST STRENGTH OF LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE has always been its people. For 127 years, the talent and tenacity of the faculty, students, administrators and alumni have driven the college's many successes. ■ The academic year 1991-92 was no exception. While many colleges and universities across the country struggled with mounting budget deficits and declining enrollments, Lebanon Valley closed the year with a surplus of slightly over $250,000 and began fall 1992 with a full-time equivalent student body of 1,081—the largest in recent years. ■ Considerable progress was also made in the “quiet phase” of the “Toward 2001” campaign that was approved last November by the Board of Trustees. Over the first eight months of the campaign, the college received gifts and commitments of $6.7 million—a good base for achieving the working goal of $21 million over the next four years.

■ Planned improvements in the college's physical plant also were completed in 1991-92. The upper floors of the Administration Building were renovated for use as a Humanities Center, and new offices were constructed for the departments of history and American studies, religion and philosophy, and foreign languages. New quarters were provided on the second floor for political science and economics, and sociology and social work. Work was also undertaken to upgrade dormitories and to improve parking on campus. ■ The condominium project adjacent to the college is well under way and its 21 renovated units should be ready for occupancy this spring. This project is being carried out in conjunction with the Housing Development Corporation of Lancaster. ■ This past year was also a time of considerable introspection for the college family. Some 100 faculty, administrators, trustees and students worked together on the comprehensive institutional self-study required for reaccreditation by the Middle States Commission. The resulting 106-page document contains many recommendations that have already begun to be implemented. These are only some of the year's accomplishments. On the pages that follow, several of the individuals involved in other major college activities and milestone events will tell you in their own words what those events have meant to them. ■ You'll hear from one of the 85 recipients of our new achievement-based scholarships ... from one of a growing group of students from overseas ... from several faculty members who see their role extending beyond the classroom walls ... from two record-breaking student athletes and a caring student mentor ... from an outstanding alumnus who has served the college in many ways for many years ... from trustees who have chaired our fund-raising efforts ... and from two members of the Lebanon community who have made significant and lasting contributions to the college. ■ These voices from the Valley are representative of the many, many people in the campus community who helped make 1991-92 an outstanding year. Their accomplishments—more than any facts and figures—express the achievements of Lebanon Valley College.

The Year in Review

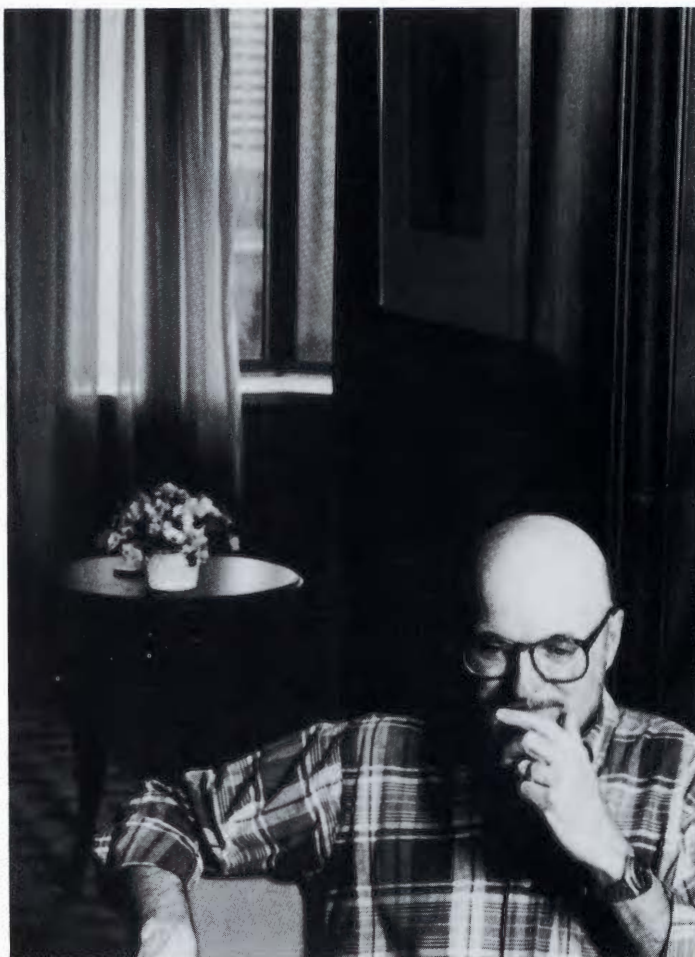

The following are a few of the many significant events in the life of the college during the 1991-92 academic year.

August

24 "The college is increasingly being recognized for the extraordinary impact it has on the lives of its students and for the quality of its academic programs and its remarkable faculty," observes President John A. Synodinos at the opening convocation, launching Lebanon Valley's 126th academic year. More than 1,500 full- and part-time students are enrolled as undergraduates and in the M.B.A. program.

September

6 The well-known Authors & Artists series, now based at the college, gets underway with a concert by the Subdudes, a New Orleans style rhythm and blues band.

25 John Barth (above), professor emeritus at the Johns Hopkins University, reads from his novels in an evening seminar.

26 The Second Annual Achievement Challenge Golf Tournament, with honorary chair Sam Bowie (Lebanon native and star center for the New Jersey Nets), raises over $32,000 for disadvantaged college-bound students from the Lebanon School District. Below, Bowie talks with Lebanon elementary school pupils.

October

11-13 Some 300 alumni converge on campus for the Homecoming Weekend celebration.

21 The field hockey team wins the 1991 MAC Championship and advances to the final eight at the NCAA National Tournament.

25-27 Parents of students enjoy three days of concerts, movies, athletic events and an art exhibit on campus.

26 Ross Fasick '55, group vice president of DuPont Chemical's automotive products division, urges America to become more competitive by realigning government and business and by improving education, as he speaks at the college's annual Vickroy dinner at Hotel Hershey.

November

2 The trustees approve preliminary plans for a major campaign—"Toward 2001: Shaping the Future."

6 Lebanon Valley announces new achievement scholarships to reward students in the top 10, 20, and 30 percent of their high school class. The effort garners national publicity, including a segment on CNN and a lead editorial in The Washington Post.

8 Renovated and expanded, Laughlin Hall is rededicated, along with Bollinger Plaza. Cutting the ribbon are Elizabeth Bollinger and Charles W. Wolfe.

8-9 The first-ever Lebanon Valley Leadership conference involves 30 alumni leaders and their spouses.

December

7 Friends of the Gallery host a chamber music concert and exhibit of the college's art collection in the former Lutheran church, which will become an art gallery/recital hall.

8 Christmas at the Valley rings in the holiday season.

January

18 The newly formed Alumni Council meets for the first time.

22 Spanish author Elena Castedo reads from her works in the Mund College Center.

28 Opera Outreach opens its season with a talk on the history of opera by Elizabeth Billings, assistant professor at Dickinson College.

February

3-14 The Modern Mandolin Quartet is in residence, delighting all in a concert as well.

25 The 13th annual Founders Day Convocation honors Lebanon businessman Donald W. Leshner for his educational service (see page 4).

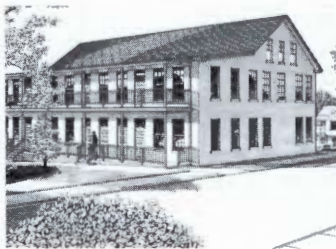

26 The men's basketball team ends the season with the most wins since 1972-73. A birthday celebration at half-time honors the venerable "Hot Dog" Frank Aftosmes—90 years young.

March

2 Feminist Kathleen Barry (above), is featured at a seminar on international women's issues. A panel of 10 Lebanon Valley international students offer their perspectives, too.

9 The college and the Housing Development Corporation of Lancaster join together in a $1.4 million project to transform two off-campus buildings into residential condominiums.

21 Over 600 students from 70 high schools compete in the college's Quiz Bowl.

April

15 Making Annville its first stop on a national tour, Zeit/Worte (Words of Their Time), a multimedia exhibit, attracts so much attention that the college extends its stay. A project of the Goethe Institute of New York, the exhibit illustrates events in Germany from the Nazi era to reunification.

25-26 The 22nd Annual Spring Arts Festival draws appreciative crowds.

27 Noted Chinese scholar Liu Haiping of Nanjing University talks about "Education in China."

June

5-7 More than 500 graduates come to campus for Alumni Weekend. Mary Jane Eckert Hoffman '48, professor of music at the University of Illinois, accepts the Distinguished Alumna Award.

30 The Music Department is reaccredited for another 10 years by the National Association of Schools of Music, maintaining a tradition of excellence that has spanned half a century.

May

7 Jazz pianist and composer Henry Butler is the season's finale for Authors & Artists.

9 Some 272 graduates take part in the college's 123rd commencement ceremony. Helen Spangler Caffrey (right), executive director of the Pennsylvania Senate Education Committee, is the speaker. Both she and Richard A. Zimmerman, chairman and chief executive officer of Hershey Foods Corporation, receive honorary Doctor of Law degrees.

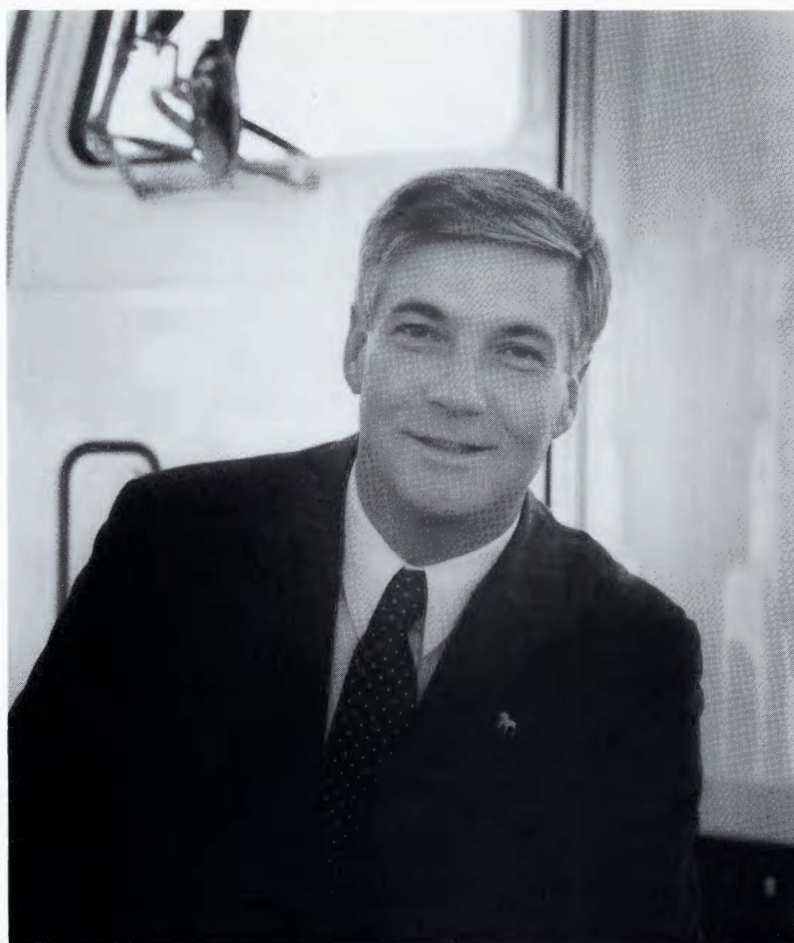

"What I give comes back to me in so many ways."

As Lebanon businessman Donald W. Leshner accepted the 1992 Founder's Day award in February, he quoted Winston Churchill's famous admonition, "You make a living by what you get, but you make a life by what you give."

The quote, says Leshner, reflects his own philosophy on community service. "I get a great deal of personal satisfaction from my involvement with community organizations and with Lebanon Valley College. My life has really been enriched—what I give comes back to me in so many ways."

Leshner, who is president of Leshner Mack Sales and Service, Inc., serves the community in a variety of ways. He is a member of the United Way Board of Directors and the cabinet, and on the boards of the Lebanon Valley National Bank, the YMCA and the Good Samaritan Hospital. A member of the Lebanon Rotary Club, he is also active in the Lebanon Valley Chamber of Commerce, Masonic Lodge #226 of Free Accepted Masons and St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

Leshner became involved with the college six years ago through the corporate annual giving program. For the past three years he has chaired the 15-member committee that plans and carries out the Achievement Challenge Tournament, a golf outing that has raised $60,000 from the community to provide scholarships for college-bound students from the Lebanon School District. The scholarships are the capstone of the Lebanon Valley Education Partnership, the college's cooperative venture with the school district to encourage disadvantaged students to pursue a college education.

"Organizing the golf tournament has been one of my most rewarding activities," says Leshner. "Support from the community has been tremendous. People recognize the importance of higher education, and have welcomed the opportunity to help today's youths who otherwise would probably not be able to attend college."

He lauded the involvement in the tournament of its honorary chair, Sam Bowie, a Lebanon native who is star center for the New Jersey Nets basketball team.

"We couldn't have accomplished what we have without Sam," Leshner states. "He's been tremendously helpful. He not only participates in the tournament, but also visits the schools and serves as a role model to help young people find their way. He's a wonderful athlete and person, and a real asset to this community."

"You try your best here because you know that people notice and really care."

Freshman Jacqueline Wevodau's first impression of Lebanon Valley College has turned out to be a lasting one.

"When I came to campus for a visit last fall, the thing that stood out in my mind was the personal tour Professor Paul Wolf gave me of the entire science building," she states. "He was so wonderful. He even took me to the greenhouse. I was impressed by his energy and concern—things like that you never forget.”

Wevodau applied to other colleges, but Lebanon Valley was her first choice. She was delighted to find she was eligible for one of the new achievement-based scholarships that the college began offering top students in 1991-92. She was one of 85 students who received the scholarship.

“I couldn’t have afforded to come here without the scholarship. Qualifying for it was just a dream come true,” says Wevodau, who graduated in the top 10 percent of her class at Central Dauphin High School in Harrisburg.

A biology major who hopes to go to medical school, she says Lebanon Valley has more than lived up to her expectations. “I love it here. My courses are great, and I particularly like the individual attention you get from faculty. You feel the whole community here cares,” she states. “At a large college you wouldn’t experience that. Here, you try your best because you know that people notice and really care.”

Wevodau has rapidly become involved in campus activities. She made the cheerleading squad and was elected student council representative from the freshman class. She also plans to be a tutor and is interested in joining the Young Republicans Club.

Her parents applauded her decision to attend Lebanon Valley, she says. “They were careful not to push, but it was clear after the first campus visit that this was the school they preferred,” she states. “They recognized how excellent it is academically, plus I think they felt I would be safe here. We all just feel really lucky.”

“I can’t say enough about the teachers and coaches who nurtured and believed in me.”

Scott Young '92, one of the finest runners in the college’s history, aims to become one of its finest graduates in the field of actuarial science as well.

He’s likely to achieve his goal. Before graduating in May, the long-distance runner garnered numerous academic and athletic awards and left his name next to many college records.

Named six times to the Dean’s List, he was also a member of the prestigious Middle Atlantic Conference All-Academic Team. When he wasn’t studying or running, he served as an NCAA Division III qualifier in the 3,000-meter steeple chase in 1991 (11th in the nation).

On the cross country team, Young was a four-time Most Valuable Player and captain. He was a member of the MAC All-Conference Team in 1989 and 1991; was an NCAA Division III Mid-East All Region Team member in 1988, 1989 and 1991; and was an NCAA Division III National Qualifier in 1989 and 1991.

“My years at Lebanon Valley have been ones I’ll always remember,” says Young. “I was given a tremendous amount of opportunity to develop myself as a student and as an athlete. I believed in me. I can’t say enough about the teachers and coaches who nurtured and believed in me. Their help and encouragement have prepared me well to begin the next phase of my life.”

“Educating students for life in the 21st century requires a global view.”

Tropics, heat, bananas, rain forests. These are just a few of the mental pictures we have of Costa Rica. To biology professor Susan Verhoek, however, Costa Rica is a mecca for biologists, which is why she traveled there last summer.

“Educating students for life in the 21st century requires a global view—one that is sensitive to the environment and the place of humans in it. Costa Rica is rich in biological diversity, and much of our understanding of rain forest biology comes from research done there,” she states. “I felt a trip to Costa Rica would broaden my perspective and ultimately that of my students.”

Partly funded by a grant from the college, Verhoek spent two weeks on a naturalists’ study tour, visiting biological and agricultural research stations, as well as a variety of botanical environments. The knowledge she gained from the trip—and a trip two years ago to Puerto Rico—she invests back into her classroom.

“Field experiences translate into better teaching. It’s helpful for me to actually see a particular environment firsthand so I can get an accurate picture and be able to explain that picture to my students,” Verhoek points out.

The information she gleanes from outside professional associations also has an impact on her classes. For nearly 20 years, she has been active in the Society for Economic Botany, an international group of botanists. She has been president and vice president, and currently chairs the protocol committee.

“My ties with the Society have been extremely valuable,” she notes. “The Society not only helps me to keep up with developments in my field, but I also pick up information and examples that are useful in the classroom.”

Teaching is a craft, says Verhoek—something you continually work at. “It’s important for people to understand that faculty are not only teaching, but are working on perfecting their teaching. They work year by year to improve their courses.”

She also works closely with students on research projects focusing on the vegetation in Central Pennsylvania. “We’re fortunate that Lebanon Valley is in a place where you can get to the vegetation easily,” she states. “We’re not in a big city, and for both classes and research, students have access to a lot of types of environments.”

Verhoek is intent on instilling in her students an appreciation for botany. “Students obviously have varying degrees of enthusiasm for botany, and only a few will do it as a profession. What I want to do is give them an overall framework from which all facts hang. If they can remember that framework, they have something to build on for the rest of their lives. Even if they are not botanists—if they are simply doing gardening or traveling—they will have an understanding and appreciation of plant life and the natural world.”

“Being in a different country has made me grow a lot, and not just in language skills.”

When Midori Moriyama ’94 first came to Lebanon Valley three years ago, it was a time of great confusion and stress in her life.

“The first six months were extremely difficult,” she confides. “Although I had studied English in Japan, I wasn’t able to speak well, and I wondered if I was ever going to learn. It was also daunting to find myself in a completely different culture. I felt lost and alone. Everything from the food to the people seemed strange.”

Today, Moriyama’s English is excellent, and she says she feels very much at home in America and at the college. This past summer, when she went back to her hometown of Nigata to teach English to junior high students, she was so fluent that her students asked her if she was born in America.

“I’ve changed a lot in three years,” she states. “Being in a different country has made me grow a lot, and not just in language skills. I’m much more independent and I feel I can take care of myself. I have also learned a great deal—not only about academic subjects, but also about relationships and people. I have appreciated the time my teachers and some of my classmates have taken to help me learn and grow.”

Moriyama, who is an English/communications major with a minor in Spanish, would like to be an interpreter or work in business or education—“somewhere where I can use my language skills,” she states.

Will she remain in the United States when she graduates, or will she return to Japan? “I’ll go anywhere I can get a job,” she states. “I’m not as concerned as I used to be about what country that is in.”

Moriyama was one of 18 international students attending Lebanon Valley in 1991-92. The college is actively recruiting students from other lands as part of a continuing effort to internationalize the campus and the curriculum.

“Next to my faith and my family, there is nothing more dear to me than Lebanon Valley College!”

John Walter '53 is an all-court pro. During the week, he's president judge of the Lebanon County Court of Common Pleas. After hours, he presides on the court of the Lynch Building gym, where he announces basketball games.

His role on the basketball court is just one of the many ways he has served his alma mater over the years. Currently a member of the college's Board of Trustees and of the Alumni Council, Walter also has been president of the Alumni Association, a business law instructor, a legal advisor and fundraiser. In 1990 he received Lebanon Valley's Distinguished Alumnus Award for his outstanding professional achievement and service to the college and the community.

He speaks fondly of his “long love affair” with Lebanon Valley. “There is an undefinable mystique about the college for me,” he states. “I fell in love with her when I was seven years old and my dad took me to campus for a Homecoming football game. I was immediately smitten with a love that has just never died. Next to my faith and my family, there is nothing more dear to me than Lebanon Valley College!”

Over the years, Walter has watched the college go through many permutations, but he is particularly excited about the recent physical and organizational changes—especially the restructuring of the Alumni Council in 1991-92.

“I think the reorganization is an extremely positive step, and I am very upbeat about it,” he notes. “We have a broader cross-section of alumni working on the council than ever before. We have a college president and administration who are backing their words with action. And we have a wonderful constitution and by-laws that are embodied in a workbook—something we never had before. I can't help but think we are poised to accomplish great things in the future.”

"I want to see the gallery completed tomorrow."

Suzanne Arnold is a woman with a mission. Chair of the college's art committee, she is the guiding hand behind the transformation of the former St. Paul Lutheran Church into an art gallery and small recital hall.

"I'm very impatient about this project," she admits. "I want to see the gallery completed tomorrow."

While the goal won't be met quite so soon, considerable progress has been made over the last year. An architectural firm, David Lynch and Associates, was chosen to complete the design.

A "Friends of the Gallery" group was established, and its 206 members have contributed over $16,000 for operational expenses. An additional $15,000 in capital pledges has been received, as well as a gift of $75,000 to replace the building's ancient roof. Arnold and her husband, Ed, have made a significant contribution.

An artist who paints for her own pleasure, Arnold sees the gallery/recital hall as a major resource for the community. "We don't have anything like it in this area," she points out. "There are so many things the gallery can be used for. I can see so many kinds of things happening there—from exhibits to concerts to weddings."

Her vision for the facility includes a volunteer and docents program to involve community people. "I would like to see people at all levels and of all ages involved with the gallery. There are just so many possibilities."

Originally the gallery was going to accept just regional art, but the parameters have been expanded, says Arnold. "We want to support local artists, but we also want to have traveling exhibits included from larger galleries."

Already four local artists have given gifts of their works to the gallery, plus two pieces of art have been purchased. Even though the building is still in a transitional state, the gallery last spring hosted the Zeit/Worte (Words of Their Time) exhibit from the Goethe Institute in New York.

"We've made a lot of progress," says Arnold. "I'm sure we'll make a lot more in the coming year."

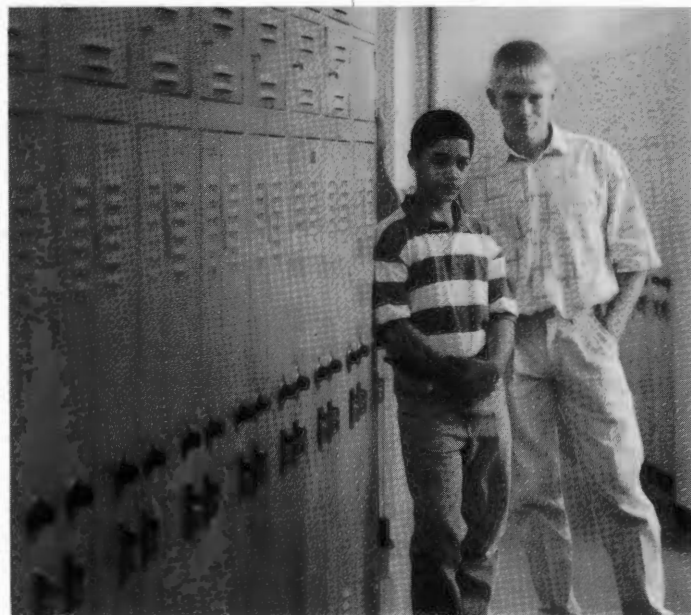

Although she is not an alumna of Lebanon Valley, Arnold has long been involved with the college. "I like the college and love the people here," she says. "Everybody is just super and I find it very rewarding to be involved."

"I knew I would enjoy being a mentor."

When Corey Johns '95 heard the college was looking for people to become mentors to pupils through the Lebanon Valley Education Partnership, he signed up immediately.

"It seemed like a good fit," said Johns, who is an actuarial science and economics major. "I had worked with kids in the Big Brother/Big Sister program when I was in high school, and I knew I would enjoy being a mentor. I also liked the whole idea of being able to help kids have a shot at going to college."

The Partnership, in its third year, is a joint project of Lebanon Valley College and the Lebanon School District. It identifies economically disadvantaged eighth graders who are capable of going to college, and matches them with Lebanon Valley students who will maintain contact with them throughout their high school years, encouraging them to take college prep courses and gain the other skills they will need. Later, the college will assist the students in applying for college and securing financial aid.

Last spring, Johns took two eighth graders under his wing—Ankor Gutierrez and Kevin Hammock. He began to get to know the boys by inviting them to concerts on campus and to a play at Lebanon High School.

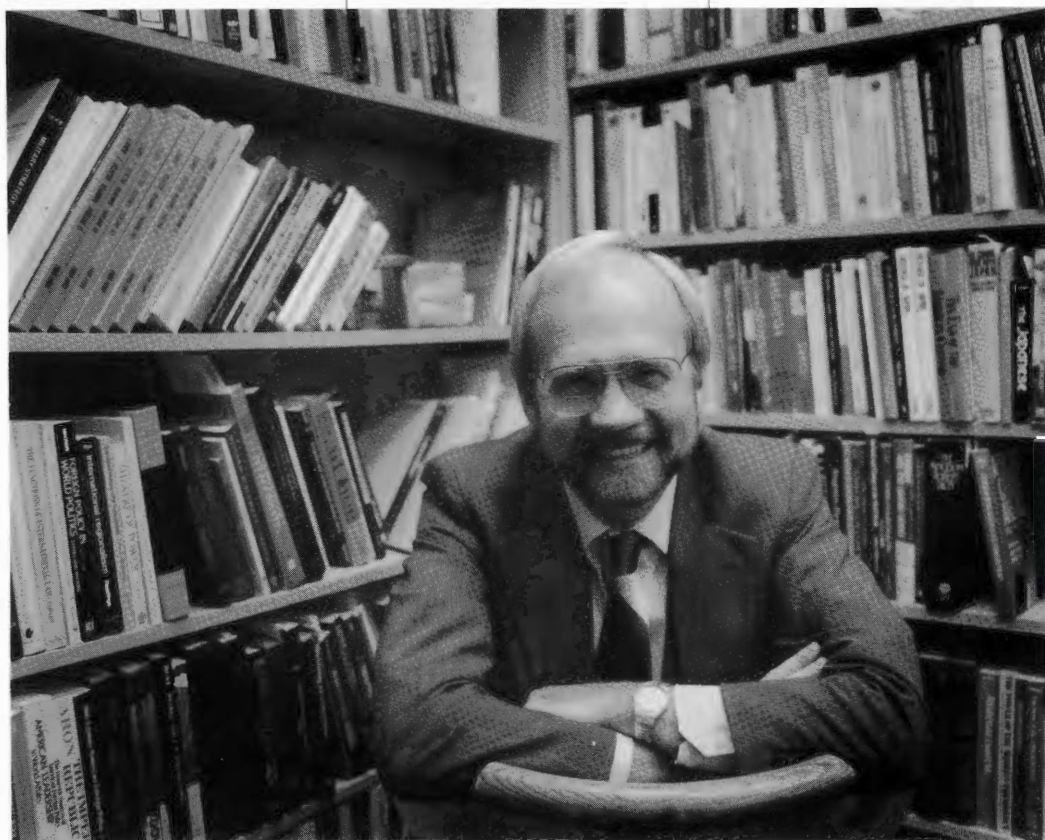

"It was a little strained at first," admits Johns. "They were both quite shy, but gradually they began to open up. Now we really are friends."

Johns keeps in touch with the two boys and contacts them either by phone or letter every two weeks, including during the summer. At least once a month they undertake an activity together. This year, Johns says he also intends to go and watch the boys play basketball.

"I enjoy my time with them," he says. "They are great kids and they have a lot of potential. It makes me feel good to be helping them realize it."

Both boys signed up for college prep courses this fall, and Johns says he believes they will follow through. "They had never really thought about going to college before, and now they know that not only is it possible, but that it is a desirable thing to do."

Johns is one of 80 mentors working with some 60 eighth and ninth graders in the Partnership program. The program is going well, says coordinator Dan McKinley, who is also director for leadership studies at the college. "We've had a 100 percent success rate so far," he states, since all 60 have signed up for such college prep courses as algebra and a foreign language. Adds McKinley, "Now it's our job to help them maintain their vision of a college education over the next four years."

"It's clear that the college understands and values professional development."

One of the biggest pluses of teaching at Lebanon Valley, says political science professor Eugene Brown, is the support given to faculty for professional growth.

"It's clear that the college understands and values professional development and supports faculty in their efforts both to grow and to carry the college's name out into wider professional and academic circles," he states.

He's a good case in point. Brown spent three weeks in Japan in June, funded in part by the college, where he augmented his ongoing research on Japanese foreign policy. During his stay in Tokyo, he interviewed senior foreign ministry and defense officials, as well as journalists, academics and think-tank experts.

Brown, who has written extensively on Japan, also traveled to several conferences during the year. They included the International Studies Association annual conference in Atlanta, where he gave a paper and also chaired a panel on Japanese foreign policy; the National Emergency Training Institute's annual conference in Emmitsburg, Maryland, where he was the keynote speaker; the U.S. Army War College's Asian Security Colloquium, where he was a speaker; and a national conference in Baltimore on the Middle East after the Iraqi invasion. There, he gave a paper on Japanese policy during the crisis, which will be published as a chapter in a forthcoming book.

"Traveling to these conferences certainly enhances my professional development and also benefits my students and helps build and reinforce the college's reputation," says Brown. "Those much-discussed rankings of colleges are based on general perceptions that circulate in academic circles, and faculty publications and professional visibility are two of the biggest boosts to any college's reputation. I'm proud and grateful to be associated with a college that is so supportive of its faculty."

Brown was only one of the 56 faculty members who received college funds to travel, attend conferences and seminars, and do research.

"We spent $26,829 on faculty professional development in 1991-92," says William McGill, vice president and dean of the college. "Faculty are our most valuable resource. Faculty development programs are a critical element in keeping that resource fresh and creative."

"These students have become virtual experts on many of the instruments."

The chemistry department has built up an impressive array of modern instrumentation over recent years, making Lebanon Valley one of the best-equipped small colleges in the country. Finding up-to-date experiments to teach students how to use these high-tech instruments, however, has been a real headache for the faculty, says chemistry professor Owen Moe.

"There were very few experiments available that use modern instruments like the gas chromatography/mass spectrometer and the nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometer," Moe states. "So, basically, we decided to do it ourselves."

Moe began developing a series of laboratory projects that would be patterned after actual research, that would make use of a variety of instruments and that would incorporate different disciplines. He wrote grant proposals to support the projects, and as a result, $54,100 flowed in from the National Science Foundation (NSF) and $7,300 from the Dreyfus Foundation. The NSF grant was one of only four awarded nationwide to chemistry departments; other recipients were the University of California at Berkeley, the University of Wisconsin at Madison and the California Institute of Technology. During the year, the department also received $9,850 more from NSF and $10,000 from DuPont for additional electrochemical equipment.

Student laboratory assistants have played an essential part in developing the project, says Moe, thus continuing the college's long tradition of having students and faculty working closely together on research. When the experiments are ready, they will be used in Lebanon Valley courses, be submitted for publication to chemical education journals and be presented at regional and national professional meetings.

"The project has been useful on a number of levels," says Moe. "We'll end up with excellent experiments for our students, and perhaps national recognition for our work. The training that the student assistants have received is invaluable. They simply can't get that kind of intensive training in a regular four-hour lab course. These students have become virtual experts on many of the instruments."

"For over 40 consecutive years, there have been summer research projects in chemistry involving students," Moe points out. "And most faculty research projects in the department have a student component. We want to make sure students get the background knowledge and skills they need to go on in the field."

The hands-on work and coaching pays off. Some 85 percent of Lebanon Valley chemistry graduates who have participated in summer research have gone on to graduate or professional schools, many earning a Ph.D. in chemistry at major universities, says Moe. "We want our students to go as far as they can, and we provide as much support as possible to help them do it."

"I really like working with kids, and I'm eager to get into the classroom."

Sandy Fauser '93 never boasts about her accomplishments. But the quiet All-American was the focal point when Lebanon Valley's field hockey team captured the 1991 Middle Atlantic Conference Championship and was one of the eight final teams in the NCAA National Tournament.

Fauser, who will be tri-captain for the 1992 season, came to the college from Manheim Central High School, where she played basketball, hockey and softball. She refined her hockey talents at Lebanon Valley and last year was named a CFHCA/Division III National All-American, a rarity for a player in her junior year.

"My experience at Lebanon Valley has taught me how to work with a group of people on and off the field," she states. "Hockey has helped me build my confidence level as a player, as a student and as a person. Achieving in athletics has helped me to meet academic goals as well."

An elementary education major, Fauser looks forward to teaching. "I really like working with kids, and I'm eager to get into the classroom. I believe my education here will equip me well to meet the challenges I'll encounter."

She will undoubtedly continue her involvement in athletics. Over the past two summers, she has coached in the Mid-Atlantic Field Hockey Camp in Lewes, Delaware, and has also worked with young athletes at Future

Stars International, a sports camp held each summer in locations throughout the United States.

Fauser has also been involved in the U.S. Olympic Developmental program, a selection camp for the national team that includes the best high school and college players from across the nation.

Mutual Effort Spurs Success

A YEAR OF CHALLENGE AND ACHIEVEMENT best describes the Advancement program as we strived to involve more friends in the life of Lebanon Valley and to strengthen its resources.

■ Congratulations to Annual Giving Chairman Pete Strickler '48 and his volunteers for reaching $1,018,848, a new record that earned the college an additional $80,000 from the Josiah and Bessie Kline Foundation. Overall, in 1991-92, the college received $2,453,312 in gifts and grants. Alumni last year met a special organizational challenge: to launch a new alumni association. Led by Alumni President Betty Criswell Hungerford '54, the association adopted a new constitution and achieved new governance through an elective Alumni Council. Steve Roberts '65, who had served as vice president, succeeded Betty in June and leads an association full of enthusiasm. ■ We have every reason to be proud of the many things happening at the Valley—new academic scholarships, new cultural and public events series, sports teams on the rise. It presented a real "information challenge" to inform and interpret events for our many friends. The College Relations Office achieved success in both the print and electronic media, with the crowning recognition being a lead editorial in The Washington Post praising Lebanon Valley for rewarding students' high school achievement with college scholarships. ■ Another significant milestone was the establishment of the Friends of the Gallery, whose support of the college's art collection is being guided by Suzanne Arnold.

■ The fund to assist Lebanon school children to prepare for and attend college—the Lebanon Valley Education Partnership—was strengthened for the third year by a successful fundraising golf tournament. I'm grateful to Lebanon businessman Don Leshner for heading that program. ■ In November the trustees voted to begin preliminary planning for a major campaign, to be called "Toward 2001: Shaping the Future." Tom Reinhart '58, chairman of the board of trustees, has shouldered that responsibility and has enlisted Clark and Edna '59 Carmean as honorary co-chairs and Darwin Glick '58 as trustee chair. The potential for Lebanon Valley is encouraging, and I commend these leaders for committing their time, talent and treasure.

■ During the year, alumni and other friends have helped the college by making annuity gifts. It was especially impressive that several retired faculty members were among the nine new donors who gave a total of $233,222 in return for lifetime incomes. Including legacies, planned giving brought the college nearly $700,000 last year.

■ Leadership of the College Advancement Committee now passes to Trustee Darwin Glick, and I wish him Godspeed. The story of our college's challenges and achievements is really one of mutual effort by trustees, alumni, parents, faculty and staff, businesses and other good friends. I am especially proud of the progress of our Advancement staff during these past several years. On behalf of Lebanon Valley College, I extend my heartfelt thanks to one and all.

The True Measure of Our Gifts

THE BIG NEWS FOR ANNUAL GIVING FOR 1991-92 was the success of the ambitious fourth-year goal of the challenge offered by the Josiah and Bessie Kline Foundation. Understanding that unrestricted annual giving undergirds quality education, the foundation challenged Lebanon Valley to increase annual gifts by $80,000 in each of the five years from 1989 to 1993. The foundation matches each year's success, up to $80,000 annually. This past year, alumni, parents, businesses and other friends generously gave $897,833, surpassing the challenge by more than $40,000. ■ This was achieved through the dedicated help of our annual giving leaders: Russ and Cathy Dennis, Parents Fund; Ernie Kline, Friends of the College; Roy McMIndes, Business; and John Norton, College Family. Sincere thanks to all of them and to my fellow trustees whose annual giving support reached 100 percent. ■ We usually measure our annual giving success by dollars and percentages, but there is another, truer measure of our effort to give the college the resources it needs. That measure is the successful education and life experiences of the young people who are entrusted to us for four years. My thanks to each one of our 3,584 good friends who shared their funds to enable our students to achieve success in their lives.

Lebanon Valley Education Partnership

The Lebanon Valley Education Partnership is a program being carried out with the Lebanon School District that encourages young people to consider attending college. The three-part program familiarizes students with the college environment, identifies those qualified to pursue a college education, and provides scholarship funds if they should choose Lebanon Valley. Last September, friends of the college and representatives from local industries participated in a golf outing at the Lebanon Country Club, raising $33,000 for scholarship assistance. Honorary Chair was Lebanon native Sam Bowie, center for the New Jersey Nets.
